

Governor Signs Two Employment Bills: AB2270, AB2587

By: HRWatchdog

Governor Brown signed two employment-related bills that are effective January 1, 2019: one sexual harassment bill to protect victims of harassment and one bill related to Paid Family Leave.

Bill to Protect Victims/Employers from Serial Harassers Signed

The governor signed AB 2770 (Irwin; D-Thousand Oaks) — a California Chamber of Commerce-sponsored job creator bill that protects sexual harassment victims and employers from being sued for defamation.

AB 2770 codifies case law to ensure victims of sexual harassment and employers are not sued for defamation by the alleged harasser when a complaint of sexual harassment is made and the employer conducts its internal investigation. This bill also provides additional protections to employers by expressly allowing employers to inform potential employers about the sexual harassment investigation and findings.

AB 2770 passed the Legislature with unanimous bipartisan support.

CalChamber sponsored AB 2770 because alleged harassers are not only suing victims, but also filing suit against employers for defamation. Such lawsuits put employers in an impossible position as they have an affirmative duty to take reasonable steps to prevent and promptly correct harassment.

Even worse, if the alleged harasser's employment is then terminated, or the alleged harasser resigns, employers are put in an even more difficult position. The company has knowledge of the harassing activity and yet its hands are tied. If the company tells a potential employer that the employee was accused of harassing conduct, the company is on the hook for a

Why California Business Leaders Are Fighting To Save The Gas Tax Increase

By: Alexei Koseff - akoseff@sacbee.com

It's not often the California Chamber of Commerce endorses a tax increase.

You are more likely to see such legislative proposals – on high-income earners, on services, on corporations — make the “job killers” list that the state's largest business advocacy organization puts out each year to beat back bills it doesn't like.

But when Gov. Jerry Brown and Democratic lawmakers last year passed a measure raising fees on transportation fuels and vehicle registration to pay for road repairs, it was because CalChamber, and the larger California business community, helped push it across the finish line.

Their support, along with the money and the bully pulpit it brings, will be essential for the coalition waging an uphill campaign to preserve the tax plan. Public polling indicates that California voters are ready to approve an initiative this November that would repeal the 12-cent-per-gallon hike on gasoline, 20-cent-per-gallon increase for diesel and new annual fee for cars based on their value.

“The roads are pretty miserable here in California. They've been neglected for quite some time,” said Allan Zaremborg, president and chief executive officer of CalChamber. “The

CalChamber Seeking Cleanup Suggestions on Newly Adopted Privacy Bill

The California Chamber of Commerce is seeking comments from members on the practical implications of the newly signed privacy legislation, enacted to avert a costly battle against an initiative that was headed for a spot on the November ballot.

The CalChamber and a coalition of businesses and other organizations opposed the legislation, AB 375 (Chau; D-Monterey Park/Hertzberg; D-Van Nuys), as representing a serious threat to the California economy.

Unlike the initiative, however, the legislation can be amended before it goes into effect in 2020. Changes to the initiative if it had passed, would have entailed another vote of the people.

AB 375 imposes many costly and poorly defined mandates on businesses. For example, the bill provides “consumers” with the right to request that a business delete their personal information, but the definition of consumer is so broad that it could apply to employees of a business. AB 375 also creates a private right of action for consumers in the event of a data breach that will result in a barrage of class action lawsuits because it allows for the award of significant statutory damages with no requirement of proof of injury.

See the video of CalChamber Policy Advocate Sarah Boot outlining business concerns about AB 375 at www.calchamber.com/videos.

Before the passage of AB 375, the CalChamber and coalition voiced serious concerns with the private right of action in the bill as it exposes California businesses to massive, additional liability without providing any corresponding benefits to consumers.

The CalChamber identified similar language in another bill this year, SB 1121 (Dodd; D-Napa), as a job killer.

SB 1121 now has been designated as the technical clean-up vehicle for AB 375.

Problems with AB 375

In a letter to legislators, the CalChamber and coalition urged them to fix problems with AB 375 that include but are not limited to:

- the issues surrounding enforcement;
- definitions of personal information and sale;
- consumer transparency and access;
- the right to delete information;
- certain opt-in rights;
- the mandated “opt out” button;
- the creation of rights like the European Union’s General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) in language that differs from the GDPR;
- the Attorney General’s regulatory process; and

- confusing language that will be difficult for businesses and consumers to understand.

Flawed Initiative

The CalChamber-opposed initiative removed from the ballot would have placed extraordinary restrictions on business use of personal information. It shifted away from the longstanding focus on protecting sensitive information to propose restrictions on how businesses use any personally identifiable consumer information. It also increased the incentives for filing class action lawsuits, covered all business sectors and would have been especially harmful to the data-driven economy that generates a significant portion of state revenue.

Given the extreme difficulty of amending a flawed proposal adopted via the initiative process, the CalChamber and coalition consider the legislative process preferable for a law that applies to businesses and technology, which are constantly evolving for the betterment of California.

defamation claim. If the company stays silent, the harasser is then free to victimize more individuals at his/her next job without anyone at the new company ever knowing about the unacceptable behavior.

AB 2770 will protect employers and allow them to warn potential employers about an individual’s harassing conduct during a reference check without threat of a defamation lawsuit.

Paid Family Leave Updated

The governor also signed AB 2587 (Levine; D- Marin County). Earlier this year, a new law went into effect that eliminated a statutory seven-day waiting period for Paid Family Leave (PFL) benefits. AB 2587 removes a sentence that still referenced this waiting period rule in another section of the PFL statute to make the law consistent.

Prior to January 1, 2018, there was a seven-day waiting period before PFL benefits could begin. If employers required an employee to take up to two weeks of earned but unused vacation before receiving PFL benefits, they could apply this vacation time to the seven-day waiting period.

When the law eliminated the waiting period, there was still a reference in the law to applying unused vacation time to the waiting period. AB 2587 simply erases that outdated reference. There are no other substantive changes to the vacation rule: Employers can still require the use of vacation time (up to two weeks) when an employee applies for PFL benefits.

economy depends on people being able to get to work in their cars and buses and being able to move goods.”

The business community has always been supportive of what it considers “necessary infrastructure investment,” Zaremborg said. In January, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce proposed hiking the federal gas tax five cents per year for the next five years to raise money for upgrades to highways, bridges and transit systems.

Zaremborg points out that nearly every aspect of the California economy relies on having usable roads: the transfer of goods from busy ports and warehouses to retailers, emerging sectors like on-demand rides and food delivery, and even tourists driving to San Francisco or Disneyland.

“We have to have a transportation system that allows us to sustain those jobs,” he said.

And this is the fairest way to do it, he argues. While the CalChamber usually objects to taxes that target just the business community or one industry and nobody else, Zaremborg said raising the gas tax is similar to a user fee, because it costs more the more you drive: “You get something in return equal to what you pay.”

CalChamber and dozens of local business associations have already joined the campaign against the repeal measure, which will appear on the ballot this fall as Proposition 6.

Zaremborg said he doesn’t know how much he expects to spend on the campaign. That will depend, he said, on whether proponents – including the Republican Party, which has banked on the initiative as a crucial strategy to drive up conservative turnout in November – plan to run a statewide race or focus on targeted House districts where Democrats are trying to take out GOP incumbents.

Several of those congressional candidates have contributed six-figure sums to the repeal effort, calling the fees an unfair burden on drivers already struggling with California’s high cost of living.

Republican businessman John Cox has also made the tax repeal the central issue of his gubernatorial campaign. He criticized Democrats for “sticking their hands in the pockets of Californians” and promised to use transportation revenues more efficiently if he is elected.

The opposition has raised more than $12 million so far to fight the repeal, primarily from construction companies and building trades unions, as well as from the League of California Cities and the California Democratic Party. Gov. Jerry Brown, who worked for several years to get the tax plan through the Legislature, has nearly $15 million available in his campaign account.

But not everyone is so eager to talk about a policy that is hitting consumers at the pump.

The trucking industry, which will see significant cost increases from the fuel taxes, came on board last year after a provision was added to the bill giving them a break on some antipollution rules so they could use older trucks for longer. The California Trucking Association, which has joined the coalition against the repeal, declined an interview request.

Half a dozen individual companies that expressed their support for the tax plan as it was moving through the Legislature last year – including Alaska Airlines, Bank of the West, Facebook, Google, Nextdoor and the San Francisco 49ers – did not respond to questions about their position or whether they planned to get involved with the campaign.

A notable exception is the agriculture industry, which was widely opposed to the new fees as they advanced through the Legislature. The National Federation of Independent Business this month also joined the repeal campaign, urging the state to use existing tax revenues for the road repairs.

The Western Growers Association, which represents farmers across several states, gave $100,000 last December to help qualify the initiative, one of the only major donations to the campaign that hasn’t come from a Republican politician. The organization declined an interview request, but provided a statement from January, in which it expressed concern over how the money would be spent.

“Our industry is heavily impacted by California’s already-high gas and diesel taxes, but we were presented SB 1 as a finished product. We have now been presented with a viable mechanism to force a do-over by the next Legislature, with the consent of the state’s voters, and we believe this would be in the best interests of California’s farmers,” Tom Nassif, president and CEO of the association, said.

Jim Houston, manager of government and legal affairs for the California Farm Bureau Federation, wrote in an email that agriculture groups unsuccessfully sought a remedy in the tax bill similar to the one the trucking industry received. He said that, by 2023, they will have to upgrade any trucks with engines older than the 2010 model year, even though their vehicles are driven only a few thousand miles per year and will be far from the end of their useful lives.

“Our families simply cannot afford to spend hundreds of thousands – if not millions – of dollars to replace these vehicles. We have heard from many farmers that this rule alone will push their operations over the edge and likely mean the end to many multi-generational family farms,” Houston wrote. “Farmers are not, and never have been, able to pass these costs along.”

Agriculture companies are part of CalChamber, which complicated the organization’s support for the gas tax hike and new vehicle registration fees. Zaremborg acknowledges “there’s nothing perfect for everybody,” but he argues the much-needed road maintenance will ultimately benefit farmers as well, allowing them to get their produce to ports and restaurants.

“Agriculture doesn’t do any good if it stays in the fields in the Central Valley,” he said.
