

Wins in Some Areas Offset by Cost Increases in Others

Impact of Carbon Emission Cuts a High Concern

For the California employer community, the 2016 legislative year will have a variety of impacts, depending on the industry and size of business.

Small businesses benefit from the disabilities access reform bill that will limit litigation, but smaller firms most likely will bear the impacts of the minimum wage increase that phases in over the next seven years. On the plus side, the Governor vetoed a bill that would have expanded the family leave mandate to small businesses.

For businesses of all sizes and industries, the most significant impacts will come from the expansion of the state's carbon (greenhouse gas) reduction program. Although the new limit on greenhouse gases affects immediately the industries that emit carbon today, the law's implementation will expand the consequences far beyond those industries.

The new emissions limit is of high concern due to the command-and-control approach that fails to take into consideration population growth, cost, lifestyle and economic impacts. How the mandate is implemented could have serious implications for the mobility of Californians, goods and services, as well as affordable housing.

The California Chamber of Commerce advocacy team and its allies stopped dozens of harmful bills, won amendments removing the most onerous provisions in other proposals, and helped pass many bills that will increase certainty and reduce competitive disadvantages for California businesses.

In 2016, the CalChamber tracked 227 California bills, stopping 85 (including 20 job killer bills), securing amendments to 38 bills, and backing 29 bills that were signed into law (including four job creators).

Job Killers

CalChamber stopped 20 of 24 job killer bills identified this year. Most of the bills were stopped during the legislative process, either in committee, killed on the floors of either house, or amended to remove the worst provisions that earned the job killer tag. Nonetheless, five job killers made it to the Governor's desk; he vetoed one.

On September 30 the Governor vetoed SB 654 (Jackson; D-Santa Barbara), a CalChamber job killer bill that would have increased costs and burdens on small business employers in the state.

"We are grateful the Governor recognized that this bill would have hurt small business in California and made it even more difficult for them to manage their workforce," said CalChamber President and CEO Allan Zaremborg.

SB 654 would have created a new protected leave of absence for employers with as few as 20 employees. California already requires employers with 5 or more employees to provide up to 4 months of protected leave for an employee who suffers a medical disability because of pregnancy. SB 654 would have added another 6 weeks of leave for the same employee, totaling over 5 months of protected leave. The bill also exposed small employers to costly litigation.

Currently, California is one of the nation's most family-friendly states given the list of programs and protected leaves of absences available to employees. California provides paid sick days, school activities leave, kin care, pregnancy disability leave, protections under the California Family Rights Act, and the paid family leave program. This list is in addition to the leaves of absence required at the federal level.

Governor Brown agreed with CalChamber's concerns, writing in his veto message:

"It goes without saying that allowing new parents to bond with a child is very important and the state has a number of paid and unpaid benefit programs to provide for that leave. I am concerned, however, about the impact of this leave particularly on small businesses and the potential liability that could result."

Job Creators

The Governor signed all four job creator bills that reached his desk this year:

AB 2664 (Irwin; D-Thousand Oaks), signed into law on September 30, provides resources for Californians who are establishing a new business by providing the University of California (UC) with funds to expand its capacity and increase access to its innovation and entrepreneurship centers, which provide incubator space, legal services, entrepreneur training and more for researchers and other individuals looking to develop innovative solutions.

The previous week, the Governor approved SB 936 (Hertzberg; D-Van Nuys), which encourages the creation of small businesses by expanding their access to loans, and SB 1069 (Wieckowski; D-Fremont), which creates and expedites additional housing supply by streamlining the permitting process for accessory dwelling units (ADUs).

Earlier this year Governor Brown signed another job creator, SB 269 (Roth; D-Riverside), which incentivizes disability access and education. The urgency measure went into effect immediately upon being signed on May 10.

How a Hazardous Waste Management Company Protects Your Bottom Line

By: Richard Espinoza, IDR Environmental

Keeping up with the federal and state requirements surrounding hazardous waste management is challenging for small and mid-sized companies, but non-compliance can be devastating.

For smaller hazardous waste generators, maintaining compliance with state and federal regulations can be the difference between being in business and being out of business.

Your biggest ally and most cost effective option in creating a comprehensive hazardous waste game plan and protecting your bottom line is a properly licensed and experienced hazardous waste management company.

How Can a Hazardous Waste Management Company Protect Your Bottom Line?

A hazardous waste management company offers a variety of services, but the best companies have extensive knowledge of methods of handling hazardous waste, maintain a full grasp of and compliance to state and federal laws surrounding the disposal of hazardous waste, and the ability to implement a comprehensive hazardous waste disposal plan that will meet your company's requirements and objectives.

There number one objective should be to handle your hazardous waste effectively and within regulatory compliance.

Best practices should be maintained and the following are items that a good company can assist you with to keep you out of regulatory trouble including:

- Proper labeling of hazardous waste
- Perform hazardous waste determinations
- Proper disposal of hazardous waste
- Fill out hazardous waste manifests
- Manage expired hazardous waste
- Develop a hazardous waste contingency plan
- Ensure proper hazardous waste training for your employees
- Manage mercury containing waste properly
- Perform routine inspections of hazardous waste storage areas

Why is all of this necessary?

Because as a generator you maintain all of the liability by statute.

Cradle to Grave Requirements

California companies operate under some of the strictest regulations in the State of California overseen by the California Department of Toxic Substances Control (DTSC).

The overriding federal law that governs hazardous waste management is the Resource and Recovery Act (RCRA) enacted by the United States Congress in 1976. RCRA was meant to establish cradle to grave requirements for hazardous waste generators.

In simple terms the cradle to grave system creates a regulatory framework in which hazardous waste generators have "complete" responsibility for the waste that they create, from its initial generation, its transportation and to its final disposal and beyond.

This means that if you generate hazardous waste you can and will be held responsible for its improper off-site transportation and disposal.

Short of transporting, storing, treating, and disposing of your hazardous waste yourself which most companies are either not equipped to do, or do not have the inclination to do, this means that outside vendors must be retained to handle this process for you.

Make a The Right Decision

The decision to use a hazardous waste management company should not be taken lightly, especially in today's litigious world and heavily regulated industries. The news is full of stories of the latest company being fined tens of thousands of dollars, if not hundreds of thousands, for doing the wrong thing when it comes to disposing of their waste.

It is your responsibility to make sure that your company complies with regulations regarding hazardous waste disposal.

As you can see by my initial example, the stakes are high.

If your company is breaking any of the laws regarding hazardous waste, you will be held liable.

Trusting a hazardous waste management company who seems okay or is offering you transportation at a low rate can cost you dearly in the long run. Do your homework, investigate and review.

Protect your bottom line!!
