Weather Story

Confidence is high the area will see snow Friday evening through Saturday night. But there remains a widespread in the potential snow amounts with the storm. Best case is we only see a couple inches of snow. Worse case is that some places get up to a foot of snow. Bottom line is the actual amounts will vary. Prepare for hazardous travel conditions this weekend and alter travel plans to avoid the snowstorm if possible.

The snow is forecast to come in two waves. The snow is expected to begin through Friday afternoon and evening with widespread moderate snow possible overnight Friday. There could be a lull in the snow midday Saturday before the second wave moves through Saturday night. Some light snow is forecast to linger into Sunday as it ends from northwest to southeast.

Very Cold Friday into Early Next Week

January 22, 2026
4:15 PM

Most Dangerous Wind Chills

- Wind chills are forecast to be below zero through the entire day Friday and Saturday and most of the day Sunday.
- Morning wind chills of -10 to -20 forecast Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, potentially Monday morning as well.

Cold Weather Safety Reminders

National Weather Service
Topeka, KS

An arctic airmass moves in tonight bringing sub-zero wind chills to the region this weekend. Frostbite to unprotected skin can occur in as little as 30 minutes in these kinds of temperatures. Stay indoors this weekend and if you must go out, dress in multiple layers including a hat and gloves.
