There's a lot of buzz and conversation happening around the importance of employee engagement to a successful organization. Engagement is an overused, or at least misused, term. Engagement isn't a process, but rather an end-state where your employees are "all in." Engaged employees work hard on today's priorities, and when they believe what they do matters and know that you're invested in them, they will stay with your business for the long term and help you solve the challenges of tomorrow. But getting to this state of engagement requires focusing on nurturing motivation. A motivated workforce goes above and beyond to do what is in the best interest of the organization and, ultimately, the bottom line. In this class find out the steps to set clear expectations and goals and truly motivate your modern workforce.

Difficult conversations are the elephant in the room: everyone has been part of one and no one ever wants to be. As a result, most of us don't naturally develop the skills to handle them well. This class takes those uncomfortable situations head-on by addressing communication blockers, offering tips to diffuse emotion and providing a safe environment to practice the four steps to a successful outcome. So, admit it – you know the elephant is there. Let us help you figure out what to do with it!

This is a continuation of Tough Talks that was offered in 2020.

Don't forget to consider the customer while offering service. Easy, right? Then why do we all have examples of poor customer service to share? Put the customer back into customer service! The tone for a customer's experience with your organization begins at the first point of contact. Is that experience 'good enough' or is it 'outstanding'? This class helps you identify the situations that are most challenging for your organization, and then determine how you can better understand what drives customer demands, calculate the value of a customer, and provide service that builds ongoing relationships with your customers.
