Whether introverted or extroverted, all human beings are hard wired for connection which is why networking has remained one of the strongest methods to connect with others and grow your business since the late 1970s. Just like Dale Carnegie's method, networking was intended to emulate gregarious behavior on purpose, with the goal of gaining benefits in business.

Unfortunately, networking can also feel daunting, uncomfortable, and even annoying, BUT...

What if no matter who you connected with you networked 100% authentically, with intention, and had fun?

What if you could erase the worry about getting business when you networked and instead focused on connection?

What if networking was done in a light-hearted way leading to fruitful connections both personally and professionally?

Jen Shultz, Founder & Leader of The Non-Nine-to-Five™ has been networking intentionally and consistently for over a decade, attending more than 400 events! Through her focused efforts Jen has built her coaching business from the ground up, landing her speaking engagements, long standing clients, and exciting collaborations!
