The U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Litigation Center filed an amicus brief for Judge Bates to consider before the oral arguments were heard in January, 2019 and will continue to defend the regulation through the litigation process.

The U.S. Chamber is working to clarify the immediate implications for previously launched AHPs, as well as those with impending effective dates while the litigation proceeds through the appeals process.

The legislation creates the Collective Bargaining Freedom Act providing that employers and labor organizations covered by the National Labor Relations Act may execute and apply agreements requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment to the fullest extent authorized by the National Labor Relations Act. It also asserts it is the state policy that employers, employees, and their labor organizations are free to bargain collectively. It gives the General Assembly the exclusive authority to enact laws or rules that restrict the use of union security agreements between an employer and a labor organization, prohibiting local governments from enforcing any such law or rule. It changes a reference to federal law with respect to union security agreements from a reference relating to requiring membership in a union in conflict with state law to a reference relating to unfair labor practices in connection with membership in a union.
